4.3.1 Library Automation Using Integrated Library Management System (ILMS)

Spoorthi Ayurveda Medical College & Dr. S. V. Savadi Ayurveda Hospital, Gangavathi – 583227, Karnataka, has a well-established and automated central library equipped with an Integrated Library Management System (ILMS) to ensure efficient management of library resources and services.

The institutional library has a collection of 8,000 books, covering various disciplines of Ayurveda, modern medical sciences, basic sciences, clinical subjects, research methodology and allied healthcare sciences. The collection supports undergraduate medical education, academic learning, clinical knowledge enhancement and research activities.

The library utilises ILMS software for systematic management of its library operations, including book cataloguing, classification, accession records, circulation management, issue and return of books, stock verification and maintenance of library records.

The automation system facilitates efficient organisation of library resources, improves accessibility to information, reduces manual documentation and enhances the overall efficiency of library administration.

The library provides a conducive learning environment for students, teaching faculty and researchers, encouraging independent learning, academic excellence, evidence-based practice and continuous professional development.

With 8,000 books and ILMS-based library automation, the institution provides organised, technology-supported library services that strengthen teaching, learning and research activities.
